MOBILE MONEY SERVICES.

Regulation

Regulation presents a significant challenge as the Operator needs to form a relationship with a non-traditional partner, the Financial Regulator. The regulatory environment often dictates the required relationship with a Financial Institution which is the third component of the Mobile Money ecosystem.

MNOs offering Mobile Money services will be exposed to compliance requirements from the Financial Regulator. As such an Operator may require a banking partner or obtain a banking license to meet this compliance requirement; however this is assessed by the Financial Regulator in each market. The GSMA recommends engaging the relevant regulator as soon as possible. This is discussed in a separate paper.

Financial Service Provider

As outlined above, partnership with a Financial Institution is a potential requirement in many markets around the globe. Each party brings different skills, which together are required to offer Mobile Money products. Specifically, an Operator's major assets include brand and distribution while Financial Institutions bring compliance and product knowledge.

What each party brings

Accounts or payment instruments.

Mobile Operators	Banks
■ Untapped customer base (un-banked, prepaid, immigrants) ■ Corporate customers (also kiosks at large construction sites; Bundled Package) ■ Customer registration for mobile component (link account to mobile) ■ Strong branding ■ Mobile application and first mile automation ■ Support/customer care for mobile applications ■ GSM network ■ Retail outlets and top-up points of presence	■ Banking infrastructure (card mgmt etc) ■ Retail outlets ■ Regulatory compliance, regulator comfort ■ Regulator reporting ■ Bank accounts for consumer and ensure KYC for bank accounts ■ Connection to MCW ■ Facilitate Forex, clearing and settlement ■ Provide cash-in/out facility

The GSMA believes that mobile money services need to be developed and deployed rapidly. Changing the regulatory regime in a market to mitigate the requirement for a Financial Institution partner will take a significant investment of time and resource. Therefore, in parallel an Operator should bring a product to the market in partnership with a Financial Institution if regulation is a barrier.
